

The article

Write for real readers

WORD COUNT	REGISTER	TITLE	STRUCTURE
~250 or ~400	Match the audience	Required — catchy!	~5 paragraphs

STRUCTURE AND LAYOUT

Catchy title — rhetorical question, alliteration, bold statement

Introduction — ~50 words — grab the reader's attention immediately

Body paragraph 1 — ~50-80 words — bullet point 1

Body paragraph 2 — ~50-80 words — bullet point 2

Body paragraph 3 — ~50-80 words — bullet point 3

Conclusion — ~50 words — leave the reader thinking

DO'S AND DON'TS

DO

- Know your audience (teenagers? general public? experts?)
- Use rhetorical questions to engage readers
- Address the reader directly ("you")
- Talk about personal experiences and emotions
- Use a topic sentence for each paragraph
- Write a conclusion that leaves something to think about
- Make the opening paragraph irresistible
- Use exclamation marks and direct speech if the register allows it

DON'T

- Don't be overly emotional or dramatic
- Don't forget who you're writing for
- Don't write a boring title
- Don't write like an essay (no "It is believed that...")
- Don't ignore the publication context given in the task

WEAKER VS. STRONGER

WEAKER

"In this article I am going to tell you about the advantages of doing sport."

STRONGER

"Ask anyone who has hit the wall at kilometre 30: running is at least half a mental game."

Why it matters. An article has to pull the reader in. Announcing your plan reads flat, while a concrete hook makes someone want to read on, which is exactly what the task rewards.

KEY TIP

Key tip. Key difference — essay vs. article: an essay makes the reader think. An article makes the reader feel. Essays are fact-based; articles are personal, emotional, and engaging. Always check WHERE the article will appear — a school magazine needs a different voice than a serious newspaper.

USEFUL PHRASES

Openings

- Have you ever...?
- Do you remember the first time that...?
- Are you one of those people who...?
- There is nothing worse than...

Engaging throughout

- Can you imagine...?
- If you ask me,...
- You may not agree with me, but...
- I will never forget the time when...
- To be honest, it scares me when I think that...

Conclusions

- So next time you...
- The question is not whether... but when.
- Perhaps it's time we all...
- Food for thought, isn't it?

MODEL TEXT

Screens Off, Life On? (~250 words · Semi-formal (school magazine))

Are you one of those people who check their phone within five minutes of waking up? If so, you are definitely not alone. A recent experiment at our school challenged students to give up their phones for an entire week. The results were surprising.

When the experiment started, most participants felt anxious and disconnected. Several students admitted they instinctively reached into their pockets dozens of times a day. "I didn't even realise how addicted I was," one participant told me. However, by day three the first cracks began to show: a handful of students started talking during breaks instead of reaching for their phones. By the middle of the week, the mood had completely changed. Students who normally sat in silence were suddenly chatting, laughing and swapping stories at every break.

The most striking change was in the social atmosphere. Without screens to hide behind, students had to look at each other and hold real conversations. I know this sounds old-fashioned, but it genuinely felt different — warmer, somehow. Teachers noticed the difference too, reporting fewer disruptions and more engagement. One classmate of mine, usually glued to her screen, ended up organising a lunchtime card tournament that half the year joined.

So, would I recommend a phone detox? Absolutely, even if only for a few days. You might be surprised by what you notice when you finally look up from that little screen. Honestly, the hardest part was not giving up the phone. It was admitting just how much I had been missing.

More online. This text type also has a second model text on a different topic for you to analyse yourself, plus quizzes and a sentence-ordering exercise, at matura.bernhardgmeiner.com.